THE PATHFINDER

ORTEGA GUIDED FIRST SETTLERS

By Ronald D. Scofield

Jose Francisco de Ortega stood stiff and stocky in his best brass uniform, savoring the moment and yet waiting impatiently for the time for him to give the command to start the work he had planned for so long.

He was a little apart from the gray-robed padre, and his excellency the governor, who were talking quietly under a rustic arch in the center of the little clearing in a grove of oak trees. Behind Licut. Ortega were ranged his leather-jacketed soldiers, forming three sides of a hollow square. In a group behind the soldiers were the colonists--the Catalonian artisans, the converted Indian workers from Baja California and San Diego, the women and children of the soldiers, and the few civilian families that had come to establish their homes in this newest settlement of New Spain. At the open end of the square were the chiefs of the Indian villages of the region, and scores of their dark-skinned heathens, men, women and children, in all manner of primitive dress and nakedness.

CROSS RAISED

At a gesture from the padre, Licut. Ortega barked a command and a squad of soldiers advanced to a spot where a large, rough-hewn cross lay on the trampled grass. They raised it erect, and lowered it into a hole dug into the ground, then braced it with earth and stones until it stood, straight and true and strong.

Then the little priest, his Franciscan habit now covered by alb and stole, began reciting the ancient Latin words of the mass, before a rough-hewn altar. He invoked the blessing of God upon the cross, upon the little parcel of ground marked out for sanctification, and upon the soldiers of Spain and all good Christians there gathered. And most of all, upon the mission which he envisioned there to bring to Christian faith the heathen children of this fair land.

When Padre Junipero Serra had finished, the company rose from their knees and sang the hymn of praise, "Alabado." Then the Governor stepped forward. He stooped to the ground, grasped handfuls of grassy sod and stones, tossed the stones to the north, the south, the east and west, and spoke the traditional formula, proclaiming the protection and the civil authority of His Majesty, Carlos the Third, King of the Two Spains, over all the lands and peoples in the presidio, mission and far-flung district of Santa Barbara.

ROYAL STANDARD

The lieutenant gave another command, and a color guard, a sergeant and two soldiers, stepped forward with the royal standard of Spain, gleaming white with its center shield bearing the arms of priest he loved and revered above all men--for his courage, his inspiring faith, and perhaps just a little because Father Serra had tried determinedly to persuade the Viceroy of Spain to appoint himself--Ortega--as comandante and governor of all Nueva California. The plea had failed, and Ortega had felt the displeasure of his superior officer who had won the honor, but he would always remember with gratitude the priest's declaration of confidence in his abilities to fill the highest office in the new land.

For the present governor, Col. Felipe de Neve, Ortega had a wholesome respect as an able soldier and administrator. The Governor had chosen Ortega to command first the Presidio at San Diego, then to help establish the Mission at San Buenaventura, and immediately afterward to found the Presidio and help construct the Mission at Santa Barbara. His Presidio was to be the only fortress between San Diego and Monterey--to protect the vast area from just below the tiny new Pueblo de Nuestra Señora la Reina de Los Angeles northward to the boundaries of the Monterey district.

El Comandante Ortega turned back to the work in hand--a monumental challenge to any man. Doffing his dress uniform, he shouted to his subalterns and told them to clear the area of women and children and idle Indians and get to work--pronto.

He had a thorough plan and detailed timetable in his mind--for he was a methodical man as well as a daring trail-blazer. Before nightfall shelters of tree branches and rushes must be erected for all the company. Food stores and supplies must be protected--from the elements, and from curious savages. Fresh food must be brought in, by Indian hunters and fishermen, for "wages" of clothing and such baubles as pleased them.

TREES FELLED

Soldiers and Catalonian artisans began felling small trees and trimming branches; officers laid out the plan of the buildings, each placed so as to be replaced later by solid adobe and stone buildings. The dedicated area was marked off for the little chapel, but God's house must wait for a bit until there were houses and sturdy walls to protect His children.

Older children and some of the more vigorous women went down to the shores of the lagoon, just east of the Presidio site, to gather armloads of rushes for the roofing. A command post was set up, just back of the flagpole--a roofed area, to be enclosed later. And a carpenter set to work to fashion a rustic table, benches and stools, a crude office for the planning and administration of the whole enterprise.

It was a warm afternoon, and everyone grew thirsty and grimy in the dust--and this reminded Ortega of the need for bringing a water supply to his fortress settlement. Summoning one of his ser-

Castile and Leon, the crown of Carlos III, and the symbol of the golden fleece. The Governor of California, Don Felipe de Neve, grasped the staff and planted it firmly in another prepared hole, a few yards distant from the cross.

Then he summoned the lieutenant, and gave into his hands the command of the presidio and the territory, reading aloud the written instructions--to treat the natives as human beings, so that ultimately they may be brought to conversion; to act with prudence and circumspection; to maintain the discipline and obedience of his troops, and so to "consummate the very intentions of His Majesty and thus become worthy of his royal gratitude and bounty."

So Lieutenant Ortega, grizzled, hardened veteran of some 27 years as a colonial soldier and officer of the Spanish crown, arrived at the high point of triumph in his long career. At the age of 48, he was now commandant and architect of his own fortress, military and civil ruler of a vast area stretching from the environs of San Diego to those of Monterey, and from the Channel to distant mountains and valleys to the north and east.

Ortega at this time was the father of five sons and two daughters, the oldest 22 and the youngest 3, and had just recently buried at San Gabriel Mission an infant daughter who had lived only long enough to be baptized.

His devoted wife, the former Maria Antonia Victoria Carrillo, who had followed him in his many military assignments and civilian employments all up and down Antigua California and Nueva California, soon would bring six of their children with her to the bustling new settlement, and the oldest son, Corporal Jose Maria Ortega, was to join his command within a few months, and remain in the garrison for more than 13 years as sergeant.

WORK AHEAD

But right now, there was no presidio, no mission, not even a rude shelter for the women and children; only a trampled spot on a wooded knoll, a rustic cross and altar under a shelter of branches, and a flagstaff with the white banner of Spain spanking in the April breeze. The date was April 21, 1782.

The formal ceremonies over, there were gifts to be distributed to Yanonali, chief of the friendly Indian settlement down by the beach, and to his head men who would see that fresh fish were brought to the settlement, and work crews recruited for building the walls and the houses. There was feasting and singing for an hour or so, and then the Governor and the Padre spoke their farewells and good wishes to the little colony; and Comandante Ortega cried "Go with God" as they set out to return to San Buenaventura and eventually to San Diego.

For a few moments, the Comandante gazed in sorrow at the departing pair, with their small escort. The little Franciscian geants away from construction work, he led him on horseback up a foot path to the north, where boys and Indian converts already had beaten a track to the nearest flowing water, to fill leather buckets and bottles for the workers.

He explored a part of the rocky route of Pedregosa Creek until he reached a point where he judged the water level to be a few feet higher than the ground site of the Presidio, and from there he roughly marked a course, following the contour of the land for a canal to bring a gentle flow of water to the settlement. He instructed the sergeant to take a squad of men and start digging the ditch first thing in the morning.

As he rode back to the busy scene, he studied the terrain and then began to lay out, on the ground, the general overall plan of the walled city he had long envisioned in his mind and on paper. He sat up little piles of stone to mark the outside corners of houses that would form the interior bastion, enclosing an area of about 320 feet square. Then, 80 feet beyond this line, he marked the corners for a thick adobe and stone wall which eventually would enclose the whole compound providing a double line of defense, and also corrals for the horses.

WORK ENDS

As he rode back to camp the sun was sinking low over the Mesa, the weary workers were slowing down, resting, eating. Ortega ordered a lay-off halt to all work for the day, authorized a ration of wine, saw that his lieutenants set up guard schedules for the night, and retired to his own shelter for a bit of food and rest.

As the camp grew quiet, from sheer exhaustion, Jose Francisco Ortega lay on his bed--a blanket spread over the pile of leaves and rushes--and found he could not sleep. Ranging through his brain was a procession of images of the past, and visions of the future. He had much to remember.

Forty years ago, it was, that a Jesuit priest had awakened the spark of ambition in a normally lazy schoolboy of 8, back in La Ciudad de Celaya, the birthplace of Jose Francisco, a few miles north of Mexico City (in the present State of Guanajuato). From the moment, the young son of the respected, educated Ortega family had applied himself to his studies with a self-discipline and stubbornness that were to stand him in good stead in the rugged years ahead.

Finishing his school work, he was given at the age of 18, a responsible job of managing a storehouse and shop, keeping records and administering a business, in a colonial community where only a few of the skilled could read and write and "figure."

But office work is confining for a young man, and on Oct. 1, 1755, Jose Francisco de Ortega, then 21 and ready for adventure, crossed the Sea of Cortez (Gulf of California) to the peninsula and joined the garrison at the Royal Presidio of Nuestra Senora de Loreto. Ten months later he was promoted to corporal, in the Compañia de Cuera, or Company of Leather Jackets, colonial soldiers of Spain assigned to guard the missions and pueblos of the province.

He learned and taught other recruits, the arts of war--the use of the lance, the broadsword and the short musket; the defensive uses of the leather jacket (six plies of white tanned deerskin), the shield (two plies of raw bull's hide) and the leather apron or "defensas" to protect thighs and legs while riding through rough brush or forest. By Feb. 8, 1759, the corporal had been promoted to sergeant. Shortly afterward he wooed and won the youngest daughter of one of the most distinguished families of the province -- Maria Antonia Victoria Carrillo.

Completing five years of military service, he obtained his discharge and took his bride to the southern tip of Baja California to make his fortune in silver mining. There he was appointed lieutenant justice of all the mining camps. There, too, were born his first son, Jose Maria, and his second, Ygnacio Maria, in 1760 and '64 respectively.

BUSY CAREER

Historical events were in the making and the retired sergeant was soon to be caught up in them. King Carlos decreed the expulsion of the Jesuits from the missions they had established in Baja California. He sent Don Gaspar de Portola as governor to evict them, and turn their lands over to the Franciscan Order under El Presidente Padre Junipero Serra. Portola summoned Ortega back to the king's service, and made him manager of the royal warehouse at Loreto, in charge of all correspondence, accounts and administration. At the presidio his first daughter Maria Luisa, was born in 1768. But Sgt. Ortega was not to be a desk soldier for long. On July 5, 1768, the king's viceroy, Don Jose de Galvez, came to Loreto with orders to occupy the long-forgotten and scarcely explored land to the north--Alta California. There was danger that Russia, or England, might seize this vast area unless Spain established military outposts there. The enterprise also excited the imagination of Padre Serra, who welcomed the opportunity to establish new missions and bring into the faith thousands of new Indian converts.

So, crown and cross joined forces to subdue the wilderness of "New California," to establish forts, towns and missions, to teach the savages Christian ways--and fruitful labor--and to extend the power of Spain.

A brave expedition was launched early in 1769--two warships and two columns of soldiers, scheduled to rendezvous at San Diego Bay, and then proceed to the ultimate goal at Monterey.

The sleepless Lieutenant Ortega still could recall the grinding fatigue of that long and frustrating journey up the length of California. As trailbreaker for the second land unit that included Portola and Padre Serra, he had covered thrice the distance on the way to San Diego, spurring ahead at dawn to scout the trail, select camp sites and water sources, then returning to guide the column on its tedious march. At San Diego the expedition faltered. Scurvy had decimated the sea contingent, and illness weakened the marchers.

HEAVY LOSSES

He recalled the casualty list he had reported--"there died on the expedition among soldiers, sailors, Indians and servants: 46; there remained at San Diego: 50 odd; among all on the expedition by sea and land, there were 90 odd."

From the "50 odd" survivors, a picked group with Portola in command, Capt. Rivera second in command and Sgt. Ortega again acting as trail blazer, set out on the long and perilous march northward to find and establish a presidio at Monterey. Padre Serra and a handful of soldiers; sailors and Indians were left behind, to found the first mission in Alta California--San Diego. Before the main force left, it was felt desirable to impress the Indians around San Diego with the power of the Spaniard's weapons, so Ortega set up a bullhide target and invited the Indians to shoot at it with their bows and arrow. Then he brought up a musket squad of soldados de cuera, who fired a volley and riddled the tough leather--whereupon the savages dispersed in terror.

It was July 14, 1769, when the "army" of 28 mounted soldiers, six Catalonian volunteers, seven muleteers and some Baja California Indians, left San Diego. They moved north following the coastline for the most part. past future sites of missions and pueblos at Los Angeles, Buenventura, along the sandy beaches of Carpinteria, Santa Barbara (camping just a few hundred yards north where the restless comandante now lay, recalling his past struggles and triumphs, and envisioning his new realm where he would rule).

On north they rode, to where Gaviota gave them a choice of rugged shoreline or even more rugged paths through the mountains; and as they progressed toward the latitude where they expected to find Monterey Harbor, they had to abandon the impassable shoreline and turn inland. In doing so, somehow they missed the port they were seeking, and on Oct. 6 they paused for a council of war by the officers, to decide whether they should push on or turn back.

LONG WALK

After five days rest, the hungry, exhausted column resumed its march--though food rations were down to six ounces of flour a day and no other food; 16 of the soldiers were so sick or weakened that they were given the Last Sacraments at nightfall, and in the morning strapped to frames on saddle mules and carried along. They traversed rocky gorges, crossed mountains, cleared a path for horses through boulders and forests. And always they must be ready to meet the Indians of the area, with blandishments or threats or force, and hide their weakness.

Eventually the weary band discovered the Bay of San Francisco, "large enough to shelter all the navies of the world," and while the main body rested in camp and explored along the even shore, Ortega and a handful of picked men made their way around the south end and up the east shore, until they could look across at the Golden Gate and appreciate the perfection of this site for a future stronghold of Spain.

The comandante, resting in luxury and security in a peaceful camp under gentle skies in a grove of trees in Santa Barbara could scarcely believe that it was he who had undergone such a gruelling march only 13 years earlier. And he grumbled a bit to himself, that his achievement had not brought all that was to be done. So, at last, he dropped off to sleep.

In the next two years, the Presidio took shape as the comandante had envisioned it. Earthworks served for protection for walls, at first, and brush-and-mud huts for buildings. But one by one the most essential units were replaced with solid stone foundations and sturdy, thick walls made of adobe pressed into bricks. The water ditch was improved, lined with carefully fitted stones, and flowed into reservoirs for coolness and for a reserve supply for the dry summer months. A chapel was erected--a poor substitute for the beautiful mission which Padre Serra had visioned; but Governor Neve had decreed that the military fortress must have top priority in this particular location, and the mission would have to wait a little. (It waited four years, and by that time Ortega's great friend, the courageous and tireless Junipero Serra, had passed to his reward).

The comandante built the presidio; he irrigated the surrounding fields and raised a crop of wheat to feed his colonists and repay the Indian laborers. He established a center of military and civil rule in the wilderness, a self-sustaining colony, a place for worship and missionary work among the heathen. He ruled his little kingdom with firmness, but also with understanding, patience and wisdom.

Then came a visit from Don Nicolas Soler, Inspector of the Presidios of the Western Provinces of New Spain, in December, 1683. What happened to annoy Don Nicolas on this visit we do not know. Perhaps the toughened veteran of wilderness trails and frontier fighting, the hard-driving builder of forts and irrigation systems, the ruler of a primitive empire of savages, had forgotten some of the courtly courtesy he had learned as a youth in old Mexico. At any rate, Inspector Soler commended him, in his official report, for his long service and hard and able work to the crown, but recommended his retirement on pension because of his "disposition."

REFUGIO RANCH

So Ortega returned to Baja California, as comandante of the "fronteras," for nearly two years, then for three years he served as comandante at Monterey, now growing to an outpost of major importance. Another four years of service in command of his original military post, Loreto in Baja California, brought him at last to a well-earned retirement. He was given the rank of captain attached to his old presidio at Santa Barbara in 1795, at the age of 61, after nearly 40 years' of service to his king.

He acquired large ranch holdings at Refugio, where he lived out his last days with his family; building a prosperous ranch with strong buildings, wheat fields, vineyards, fruit trees, flocks of cattle, horses and sheep. On Feb. 3, 1798, while on his way from Rancho El Refugio to the Presidio, he died of a seizure.

He was mourned and his memory honored by all the colonists, garrison troops, fathers and officials, and by the Indians who had taken on the white man's faith and learned the white man's skills in the 28 years since Ortega had blazed the trail for Portola through the wilds of Santa Barbara County.

By Wilberta Finley.

1. JOSE FRANCISCO de ORTEGA was born in 1734*, in the city of Zelayo, in what is now the state of Guanajuato, Mexico. His wife was Maria Antonia Victoria Carrillo. She was born in Loreto in 1741, and was buried in Santa Barbara, May 8, 1803.

Children:--

- i. Ana Maria, b. Loreto, 1754; m. Pedro Mejiar.
2. ii. Ignacio Maria, b. Real de San Antonio, 1756; m. Dertrudis Arce.
3. iii. Jose Maria, b. Loreto, 1759; m. Maria Francisca Lopez.
4. iv. Maria Luisa, b. La Purisima, 1768; m. Francisco de Paula Garcia.
5. v. Jose Vicente, b. Loreto, 1772; m. Maria Antonia Sanchez.
6. vi. Jose Francisco, b. San Diego; m. Maria Francisca Yorba.
7. vii. Juan Capistrano Martin, b. San Diego, 1774; m. Rafaela Arellano.
- viii. Maria Antonia de Jesus, b. San Diego; m. Joaquin Sanxhez.

2. IGNACIO MARIA de ORTEGA (Jose Francisco), born in the Real de San Antonio (Lower California) in 1756; died in California in 1833; married Gertrudis Arce. He enlisted in the San Diego presidial company, March 29, 1792. In 1803 he was granted the San Isidro rancho, eleven square leagues, in what is now Santa Clara County. The supreme court has recently confirmed this grant to his descendants.

Children:--

- i. Quintin, b. San Diego, 1792; m. Vicenta Beltram, and had: 1. Pilar, b. 1820. 2. Magdalena, b. 1824. 3. Miguel, b. 1826. 4. Quintin, b. 1832. He was granted one square league of his father's rancho of San Isidro, by Governor Figueroa, in 1833.
- ii. Raimunda, b. 1795.
- iii. Maria Isabel, b. Santa Barbara, Nov. 19, 1797; m. Julian Cantua (b. 1788), and had: 1. Manuel Cantua, b. 1816. 2. Manuela Cantua, b. 1820. 3. Faustina Cantua, b. 1822.
- iv. Maria de la Merced, b. 1800; m. Jose Antonio, son of Jose Antonio Castro and Maria Victoria Beltran, born in Sinaloa in 1787. Merced Ortega died in Monterey, April 5, 1887. Jose Antonio Castro, her husband, was grantee of Lomerias Muertas rancho, one and one-half square leagues, in Monterey County, and Rancheria del Rio Estaneslao, eleven square leagues, in San Joaquin. He had, by Merced Ortega, twenty-four children. His daughter Modesta was the wife of Don Jose Castro, one-time acting governor of California, and comandante-general at the time of the American occupation.

- v. Maria Gertrudis, b. 1802; m. Pedro Chabolla, and had:
1. Josefa Chabolla, b. 1829. 2. Jose Miguel Chabolla, b. 1831. 3. Jose de Jesus Chabolla, b. 1833. 4. Jose Alejandro Chabolla, b. 1835. 5. Jose Salvador Chabolla, b. 1838. 7. Teresa Chabolla, b. 1839.
- vi. Maria Clara, b. 1808; m. John Gilroy, a Scottish sailor, who came in 1814, the first foreigner to settle permanently in California. The town of Gilroy takes its name from him. He received, through his wife, one square league of the San Isidro rancho. Their children were: 1. Nicodemus Gilroy, b. 1826. 2. Miguel Gilroy, b. 1828.
- vii. Maria Antonia, b. 1809; m. Bruno, son of Joaquin Bernal (b. in San Francisco, Oct. 7, 1799), by whom she had:
1. Antonio Bernal, b. 1825. 2. Dolores Bernal, b. 1827. 3. Francisco Bernal, b. 1830. 4. Pedro Bernal, b. 1832. 5. Jose Bernal, b. 1834. 6. Gertrudis Bernal, b. 1835. 7. Guadalupe Bernal, b. 1836. 8. Ruben Bernal, b. 1837. 9. Luis Bernal, b. 1839.

3. JOSE MARIA de ORTEGA (Jose Francisco), born Loreto, 1759; died 1822; married Maria Francisca Lopez. He enlisted in the San Diego company, June 9, 1777; was made corporal, November 1, 1781; Sergeant, December 21, 1788. He was grantee of Nuestra Senora del Refugio rancho, six square leagues (26,529 acres), in Santa Barbara County. In 1818 the pirate Bouchard landed at this rancho, which fronts on the Santa Barbara Channel, and destroyed a large amount of the rancho property.

BIRTH CERTIFICATES

Little-known help is awaiting if you lack a birth certificate. The U.S. Bureau of the Census can document your age (not your birth date) to the first 10-year census after your birth. The transcript is acceptable to federal and state agencies and virtually all of private industry. For $7.50 you can have two censuses searched and a transcript sent to you. Write for a form to the Personal Census Service Branch, Bureau of the Census, Pittsburg, Kan. 66726

The above copied from Business Week magazine of 13 September, 1976

PASSENGERS WHO ARRIVED IN THE UNITED STATES FROM 1821 - DECEMBER 1823, From transcripts made by the State Department. With Index. Magna Carta Book Company, Baltimore, MD. 21215. U.S.A. 1969. 427 pp.

The National Archives in Washington has 8 volumes of lists, handwritten, of passengers who arrived at American ports from 1819 to 1823. "These were copied by order of the State Department from the lists of passengers which the ship captains were ordered to deposit with the Customs Collectors of the American ports upon arrival". Apparently the government ordered this to make it possible to correct crowding and unsanitary conditions on emigrant ships in colonial days that led to the deaths of many passengers on board. The study proved effective for the column in the government report for "died on voyage" was seldom needed after improvement in shipping conditions.

This printing is the second volume to appear, made up from the original lists. The first volume was printed as "A letter from the Secretary of State with a transcript of passengers from October, 1819 to September 30, 1820". The second volume of transcripts was lost and since some of the originals are missing, some names are lost forever. It is hoped that the other volumes will be printed and become available for ancestor searchers and other historians.

The text gives, with the name of the passenger, his or her age, sex, occupation, "Country to which they belong", "Country of which they intend becoming inhabitants", and the ship or vessel with the name of the master or commander.

Passengers ranged in age from infants to an 83 year old farmer from England, with a predominance of single young men. However, many families also appear. Children were named in the original list but appear here only in numbers. There was a wide range of occupations from all walks of life.

There is an alphabetical list of places of origin and another which lists Ports of Entry. An alphabetical list of vessels also gives the type of vessel, as well as the name of the captain.

The editors give some practical hints to the genealogy researcher as to the name and type of errors that appear in handwritten, early documents. "Spelling of names is so erratic that searchers are advised to look under every possible variation of spelling, likely or unlikely". As an example, the name "O'Brien", could appear in the B's, listed as "O. Brien".

The book is a fine research tool in spite of the possibility of error in transcribing which the compilers point out. The pages of the book provide a breathtaking look into the past with glimpses into the dreams and hopes of the early Americans who came to better their lives and thereby enriched a Nation.
