PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

The Genealogical Past, Present, and Future

A SBCGS member recently remarked that he and his computer lab partner received a grade of D more than 50 years ago for their invention of using a computer to search text for a particular word or phrase. The professor said that the idea was preposterous and would never happen. Now look where we are!

Much idle musing has gone into how far technology has advanced genealogical research in just the last 15 or so years. Remember how we searched giant index books for census information, then ground through what seemed like miles of microfilm with an ancient, squeaky reader in a darkened room solely in the hope of finding a single person? If we were so lucky to find the person, then we clumsily detached the film from the machine, mounted it on an equally archaic machine, and made a print of the census page. Usually the print was barely legible, especially today when the page has darkened over time.

My father would have been delighted to learn as much about his family as I have come to know, but at the time when he might have been enticed to do such research, he would have had access to only about one-tenth of the information as is available today. I know he would have been enthusiastic about organizing the information with a computer instead of on 3" x 5" cards that he used for everything. He would have written letters and searched libraries and courthouses, but I cannot see him grinding through microfilms.

Think a moment about what was going on in your life and the world 15 years ago. It wasn't so long ago, was it? Isn't it scary then to wonder what technology will bring us 15 years from now? Can you imagine how much more information will have been digitized and be available to us? Computers have truly revolutionized data storage and retrieval in ways we barely imagined a decade or two ago. We thought, "Why do we need computers to store addresses when we have address books, to balance checkbooks when we are perfectly capable of adding and subtracting, to write letters when we have fine fountain pens, or when the library has a perfectly good card catalog file?" Can you young people imagine a world without computers, photocopy machines, cell phones, automatic shift cars, or air conditioning?

Just what might we foresee for genealogical research, let alone technology advances, in the next 15 years? First, we can look forward to the availability of the 1940 census in 2010. At least I look forward to it, because I shall be in it.

Second, we are told that the Family History Library will have digitized its entire collection of records in about seven or eight more years and placed them on line for FREE access. Maybe then I will find Jerome's parents!

Third, I believe the use and utility of DNA is going to explode in the next 15 years, yielding genealogical information unimaginable today. Even now, we can narrow down our relationships among similarly named people, and among people that purportedly came from the same place, although even with the DNA magic as it now stands, basic genealogical research is still required to determine just how we may be related to someone we've never known but with whom DNA says we are.

A marvelous graphic image is now circulating among genealogists showing the cross section of an iceberg with ten percent of it above water and labeled "Internet is just the tip of the genealogy iceberg," and the other ninety percent below water and labeled "Most genealogy is done in Libraries, Archives, and Courthouses." It will be interesting to see if "global warming" or technological advances have an effect in changing those percentages, but don't count on it. I am certain genealogists will spend many hours in those libraries, archives, and courthouses.

Regardless of how technology may advance and change future research, just think where we could be today if we had been able to search scanned images of text during the last 50 years. That professor who gave a D grade to the SBCGS member was surely shortsighted. He probably wasn't a genealogist tired of grinding microfilms.

Arthur Gibbs Sylvester, President

BARON VON STUEBEN

For history buffs who are interested in the American Revolution, there is a new book out about the Prussian Army captain who came here and turned farmers into a fighting unit. We know about the Hessians, although not all were from Hesse, who fought with the British.

FREDERICH WILLIAM AUGUSTUS,
BARON VON STUEBEN
1730-1794
By CHARLES WILLSON PEALE

SANTA BARBARA STATE NORMAL SCHOOL (STATE TEACHERS COLLEGE)

Men who were hunters and farmers knew how to use a gun but did not have the discipline or formal training to fight an experienced army. But middle-aged Baron Friedrich Wilhelm Ludolf Gerhard Augustin von Stueben became famous by turning our militiamen into a force to be reckoned with and make Washington realize that he was the man who could do the job. The Colonial Army had just won The Battle of Saratoga when von Stuben received a fictional resume from our supporters in Paris. Upon arrival here Washington knew that von Stuben knew more about tactics and strategy than most of his generals, and he put him to the task of drilling and training soldiers. At Valley Forge von Stuben trained experienced veterans and then had them drill the less experienced. It was von Stueben who drafted the official Blue Book of regulations for the army. The author of The Drillmaster of Valley Forge, Paul Lockhart, describes what went about behind the scenes in rivalries and competition with Washington's generals and the politicians in the colonies. American Spirit, Daughters of the American Revolution magazine, March/April 2009

GERMAN TRANSLATIONS BY COMPUTER

If you are considering using a computer translation for a document in German pre-dating 1900, you would be advised to read the Roger Minert article in Germanic Research in the July/August 2008 issue of Everton's Genealogical Helper available at our library. It was determined that the time used in a computer translation only slowed you down because you would still end up having to make corrections. You are advised to find an experienced translator who is qualified to do this work. Everton's Genealogical Helper, July/August 2008

"In March 1909 the California Legislature and governor James S. Gillett turned an existing city normal school into Santa Barbara State Normal School of Manual Arts and Home Economics with Ednah Rich as president. It was a two-year school dedicated to training teachers in two specialized disciplines. Over the next half century the school would evolve with appropriate name changes until attaining its present status as a general campus of the University of California in 1958."<sup>1</sup>

Later, in 1919, the school's mission was broadened to include the training of teachers and the name was shortened to Santa Barbara State Normal School. In 1921 the Legislature required teachers to complete a four-year college education, and again the name was changed to Santa Barbara State Teachers College. In 1935 the college began granting liberal arts degrees, and the word "teachers" was dropped from the title.

New legislation in 1944 abolished the college and created in its stead the University of California, Santa Barbara College.

The listings of alumni on the following pages have been scanned from the alumni directory of The LaCumbre, a 1923 yearbook of the University of California, Santa Barbara. This annual is part of the yearbook collection of the Sahyun Library. See http://sbgen.org/catalog/santa\_barbara\_yearbooks.php for these and other schools' yearbooks.

TRUTH OR GOOF: WHERE'S THE PROOF?

By Mary Penner <mary@marypenner.com>

What is a fact? Google the definition of “fact” and you’ll get a variety of answers. Most definitions hinge on the concept of truth; so, a common definition would be that a fact is something that can be proven to be true. Then how do you define “truth?” Well, one definition asserts that truth is a fact that has been verified. We’re back where we started.

Abraham Lincoln addressed the dilemma of truth by positing this question: “How many legs does a dog have if you call the tail a leg? Four—calling a tail a leg doesn’t make it a leg.” That’s the “aha” moment for genealogists; simply saying your ancestor was born on such and such a date in such and such a place doesn’t make it so. Unless you can travel back in time and witness your ancestor’s birth, you’ll never know the absolute truth about that happy event. Even eyewitnesses to events can mangle the facts; just ask any police detective investigating a crime.

Genealogists frequently wrangle with these concepts of “facts” and “truth.” We try to figure out what is true, or factual, about our ancestral past and what is Pulitzer prize-worthy fiction. Pulling together an accurate family history is problematic because we rely largely on the efforts made by humans decades--even centuries ago. And humans, as we all know, are prone to blunders, miscalculations, carelessness, and gargantuan goofs. That’s why every time we collect a piece of information about our ancestors from a source we need to consider the reliability of the source.

In the genealogy world we distinguish sources in two ways: original and derivative. An original source is something in its original form usually created by someone with firsthand information about the details described in the source. A derivative source is anything that provides information apart from its original form.

For example, an original death certificate filled out by a physician who was present when the dearly deceased departed is considered an original source.

That original death certificate may have been sent to the state or county for safekeeping. And, maybe the county recorder transcribed all of the information from the death certificate into a ledger book. The ledger book would be considered a derivative source, even if the careful clerk accurately recorded everything from the original source.

That’s the kicker, though -- just how careful were the recorders and transcribers of our ancestral comings and goings?

Maybe that physician had spent the last twenty hours helping to deliver a stubborn baby and when he arrived at Granddad’s deathbed he wasn’t quite sure what time it was, or even what day it was. In his sleep-deprived stupor, he might have mistakenly scribbled that Granddad expired on the 21st when it was actually the 31st. So, even though we have an original source the information may not always be true, factual, or reliable.

Keep in mind, also, that sources often contain two kinds of information: primary and secondary. Primary information comes from an actual participant or observer of an event. Secondary information is based on what people believe or claim to be true even though they don’t have firsthand knowledge of the event.

Since the good doctor was present at the death, the date and time of death and the identity of the deceased would be considered primary information regardless of whether it was accurate or not.

And, consider this scenario: death certificates often include place of birth and birth date. It was highly unlikely that the grieving widow, who provided those details to the doctor, witnessed her future husband’s birth. The birth information on the death certificate would be classified as secondary even though it’s documented on an original source. She may have believed that he was born in Linn County, Kansas because that’s what he always said, but, perhaps, in reality, he was born in Lyon County, Kansas and moved to Linn with his family when he was six months old.

You can see how easy it is for errors to creep into both original and derivative sources, and for primary and secondary information to be inaccurate despite the good intentions of those who provided the information. When juggling primary and secondary information in both original and derivative sources, you also need to consider the type of the evidence. Evidence can be direct or indirect. Direct evidence provides information without any need to ponder the conclusion. For example, you want to know Granddad’s date of death. You look on his death certificate and there’s the date right there in black and white (never mind, at this point, that the date

THE JACKIE KENNEDYS OF GENEALOGY

By William G. Lockwood, SBCGS Member
<WGLProductions@aol.com>

Down through the ages, all the royal families of Europe intermarried to establish political alliances. Those who manage to trace their lineage back to one such family thereby find themselves descended from a small army of kings, queens, emperors, and empresses dating all the way back to the pharaohs of ancient Egypt.

Storybook characters such as William the Conqueror, Charlemagne, Mark Antony, and Alexander the Great are firmly rooted in European lineages, but the great majority of male monarchs were stuffed shirt bureaucrats preoccupied with their administrative responsibilities — crashing bores. We are compensated, however, by the extraordinary women among them who were celebrated not only for their beauty, but for their spirited intelligence — The Jackie Kennedys of their day.

First and foremost among them is Eleanor of Aquitaine (1112-1204), title character of a 1999 biography by Alison Weir,<sup>1</sup> the best part of which is the blurb on the back cover:

“Renowned in her time for being the most beautiful woman in Europe, the wife of two kings and the mother of three, Eleanor of Aquitaine was one of the great heroines of the Middle Ages. At a time when women were regarded as little more than chattel, Eleanor managed to defy convention as she exercised power in the political sphere and crucial influence over her husbands and sons. In this beautifully written biography, Alison Weir paints a vibrant portrait of this truly exceptional woman, and provides new insights into her intimate world. Eleanor of Aquitaine lived a long life of many contrasts, of splendor and desolation, power and peril, and in this stunning narrative, Weir captures the woman — and the queen — in all her glory. With astonishing historic detail, mesmerizing pageantry, and irresistible accounts of scandal and intrigue, she re-creates not only a remarkable personality but a magnificent past era.”

• A close second to Queen Eleanor is Katherine Swynford (1350-1403), title character of a 1954 historical novel by Anya Seton,<sup>2</sup> the best part of which is also the blurb:

“Against the turbulent and glittering back-drop of 14th century England, Anya Seton has spun a lusty, uninhibited novel of a forbidden love affair that set the royal houses of Europe aflame with scandal and intrigue. It is the story of Katherine, the lovely young commoner whose beauty dazzled the English court and captured the heart of England’s greatest nobleman, John of Gaunt. Unfolded here is their life together — passionate outcasts defying the power of kings and queens, bound by a private honor that mocked the pageantry, fanfare, and evils of a corrupt and tumultuous era.”

Genealogists have since traced Katherine’s lineage to King Philip IV of France. She and John (the Duke of Lancaster) eventually married, and through their four children, virtually every royal family in Europe today can trace their lineage to them.

• To the extent that she was “the beauty of beauties . . . in the kingdom, if not in all Europe,”<sup>3</sup> and had the strength of character to walk out on her disreputable husband, Edward II of England, Queen Isabella fits the paradigm. Also endowed with leadership ability, Isabella was then able to rally enough powerful allies to have her husband and his male “favorites” thrown out of Windsor Castle, and to place her son, Edward III, on the throne. She and her closest ally, an English Earl named Roger Mortimer, acted as his regents — until he turned the tables on them.

Isabel's tragic life is the subject of an acclaimed 1957 novel, Isabel the Fair, by Margaret Campbell Barnes.<sup>4</sup> "Though France's spoiled darling might easily be termed self-indulgent and vain, she was also kind. Throughout years of painful neglect, she sought little more than the return of her rightful possessions — some solace and fulfillment in this strange, harsh land. But Isabel's grievances were shared by England's powerful barons who exploited her needs to disgrace her, and to doom her husband."

• If we are to believe Geoffrey of Monmouth, a 12th century British historian, Genuissa, the daughter of Emperor Claudius of Rome, was drop-dead gorgeous. "Her beauty was such that everyone who saw her was filled with admiration."<sup>5</sup> When her father invaded the British Isles in 43 AD, he was confronted by King Arviragus and his well-trained, well-disciplined army. Rather than engage Arviragus in a horrific battle that would've left the battlefield littered with the bodies of a thousand dead soldiers, Claudius made him an offer that he couldn't refuse — Genuissa's hand in marriage and a partnership in the Roman Empire. "Once she had been united with him in lawful marriage, she inflamed the King with such burning passion that he preferred her company to anything else in the world."<sup>6</sup>

Some historians have since taken issue with Geoffrey's romantic version of events. But to give credit where credit is due, it can be inferred that Queen Genuissa's presence at court brought the civilizing aspects of Roman culture to the relatively barbaric Brits. Wouldn't that alone have saved countless lives?

• Five centuries later, Leontius, a professor of rhetoric at the University of Athens, had a daughter named Athenais who was described by a contemporary as "multo corporis lepore ac venere."<sup>7</sup> Translation: Hot babe!

In his History of the Later Roman Empire, J. B. Bury tells us that Athenais "had been highly educated by her father. When he died, she had a dispute with her brothers about the inheritance of her father's property and she came to Constantinople to obtain legal redress. Her beauty and accomplishments won the notice and patronage of the Empress, who chose her as a suitable bride for the emperor to be [her younger brother, Theodosius II]."<sup>8</sup>

After the birth of their three children, however, Athenais was slandered into exile by the Empress, whose admiration had turned into personal as well as political jealousy.<sup>9</sup> Undaunted, the expatriate Athenais would eventually initiate and finance the building of numerous churches, hospitals, and charitable institutions.<sup>10</sup> She also left a legacy of poetic literary works. "Byzantine history offers few so strange or picturesque stories as that of the little pagan Athenian who, after having been mistress of the civilized world, ended her days as ardent mystic, almost a nun, by the tomb of Christ."<sup>11</sup>

• Then there was Queen Cleopatra VII (69-30 BC) of Egypt, the femme fatale immortalized by the Greco-Roman historian, Plutarch: "According to my sources, in itself her beauty was not absolutely without parallel, not the kind to astonish those who saw her; but her presence exerted an inevitable fascination, and her physical attractions, combined with the persuasive charm of her conversation and the aura she somehow projected around herself in company, did have a certain ability to stimulate others. The sound of her voice was also charming and she had a facility with languages that enabled her to turn her tongue, like a many-stringed instrument, to any language she wanted."<sup>12</sup> Is it any wonder that two of the most powerful men in the world at the time — Octavius Caesar and Mark Antony — fell madly, and tragically, in love with her?

• Cleopatra was regarded as the Queen of Egypt until 1913, when a team of archaeologists who'd been excavating a historic site 90 miles south of Cairo found something in a sculptor's workshop that left them quite astonished. "Suddenly we had the most alive Egyptian artwork in our hands. You cannot describe it with words. You can only see it."<sup>13</sup>

The "it" was an exquisite bust of Queen Nefertiti (14th century BC), a rough copy of which graces our downtown Santa Barbara library. Scholars have since determined that "even in the ancient world, her beauty was famous. She was more than a pretty face however, for she seems to have taken a hitherto unprecedented level of importance in the Amarna period of Egypt's 18th Dynasty. In artwork, her status is evident and indicates that she had almost as much influence as her husband [Amenhotep IV]."<sup>14</sup>

Who would deny the gracious young wife of our 35th president a place on the same plateau with these illustrious ladies of antiquity?<sup>15</sup> "Jackie Kennedy was not only young and attractive," according to one observer, "but intelligent and cultivated, and possessed an innate sense of style and elegance."<sup>16</sup> Another agrees: "For a thousand days, she was the undisputed queen of a country that claims no royalty. Married to a charismatic American president . . . she was the perfect wife for what has been described as a mythical era."<sup>17</sup>

As if they had to convince your correspondent. Were it not for Jackie, the evening news would've been tedious. Were it not for Eleanor, Katherine, Isabel, Genuissa, Athenais, Cleopatra, Nefertiti, and women like them, our genealogies would be dull indeed.

THOMAS CLAYTON NANCE JUNE 11, 1837 - MAY 10, 1913<sup>1</sup> A Biographical Sketch

By Larry Turner, SBCGS Member
<Lturner2@aoll.com>

Thomas Clayton Nance was born June 11, 1837<sup>2</sup> in Randolph County, North Carolina.<sup>3</sup> He was the third child out of six born to William Nance and Lavina Steed.<sup>4</sup> His father was a farmer and stockraiser by occupation. Thomas learned the trade of carpentry, as well as farming. In 1855,<sup>5</sup> he went to Buchanan County, Missouri to join his uncle, Rev. Isham Nance, who emigrated to Buchanan County, Missouri in 1835, at the settling of the Platte purchase. Thomas then engaged with Colonel Fouts as overseer of his plantation and slaves near Rock House Prairie, also in Buchanan County, remaining until 1858.<sup>6</sup>

In 1858, Thomas started with a freight train of Guthrie & Mitchell for Salt Lake City. He engaged as cook, but was soon promoted second wagon boss. The train was composed of thirty-two wagons, six yoke of oxen to each wagon. In the spring of 1859 he started for Pike's Peak, with his own outfit,<sup>7</sup> apparently returning to Missouri. In 1860 he went to Nebraska, where he engaged in farming, and in 1862 moved westward to the mines in eastern Oregon, where he remained until 1866, meeting with good success.

In 1866, Thomas came to California, proceeding south to San Jose and Castroville, where he worked as a carpenter, helping to build the first seven houses in Castroville. In 1867 he went to Salinas City, at the founding of that town, and engaged in the building of the first fifteen houses. He then returned to San Jose, and in partnership with W. T. Morris farmed the Parr ranch<sup>8</sup> until 1870, when he took a trip East. On returning to California, Thomas continued carpentry up to 1872, when he went to Santa Maria (then known as Central City, changed to "Santa Maria" on February 18, 1885<sup>9</sup>), and bought considerable land, which he farmed and also worked at his trade as opportunity offered.<sup>1</sup> He was a skilled craftsman and left examples of his handiwork in many parts of the state.<sup>11</sup>

On October 13, 1875, Thomas married Anna Van Deusen,<sup>12</sup> a teacher in Montecito, and later in Santa Maria, who was born in White Plains, NY, February 25, 1843.<sup>13</sup> They had one son, Willard Seymour Nance. She left him in 1879, and he filed for divorce and custody, which was granted in 1881. She apparently left the area and could not be found by the sheriff.<sup>14</sup> She apparently died in 1886.<sup>15</sup> Willard was considered retarded, although he did attend school. He lived at home his entire life and never married, dying July 14, 1952.

On January 5, 1882, Thomas married a young Margaret (Maggie) Gossage Smith,<sup>16</sup> who was more than 20 years his junior. They had four daughters. Myrtle Hillen Nance was born December 9, 1882; she married Philo Jones and had one daughter. Mary Ethel Nance, known as Mamie, was born January 6, 1885. She married Elmer Henry and they had two sons who died before they were a year old. Census records indicate that they divorced shortly afterwards. Carrie Nance was born April 5, 1887. She married Floyd Hilton and had one daughter and one son before they were divorced. Edna Nance was born January 16, 1889. She married Robert Moore; they had no children.<sup>17</sup>

It is unclear which land Thomas bought first; county records are unavailable. But in 1875, he obtained 640 acres of land (T10N, R34W, S14) from the Federal government.<sup>18</sup> In 1881 he bought 240 acres of grazing land in Cat Cañon, and he also rented 500 acres. His fields were planted to wheat and barley, and in the cultivation of the soil he used the most advanced methods, keeping always abreast of the times. He was one of the first orchardists in the valley and set out three hundred trees in 1877.<sup>19</sup> From the time of its organization in 1884 until his death he was a director of the Santa Barbara County Agricultural Society and discharged with rare fidelity and ability the duties of every office to which he was called.

Thomas participated in civic duties as well as in farming. He was on the first Board of Trustees for the Methodist Episcopal Church, the first church formed in Santa Maria in 1883, and was still serving in that capacity at least until 1896.<sup>20</sup> He was one of three initial trustees of the Central School District formed in 1881.<sup>21</sup> He was also known and popular in Santa Barbara, where according to another obituary, he was always in demand at county fairs as judge of the baby shows, in which capacity he showed a grace in making all of the mothers feel as if their babies were remarkable.<sup>22</sup> He was an active Mason, first in the Guadalupe Lodge No. 237, and then helped to form the Hesperian Lodge No. 264, where he was the first treasurer<sup>23</sup> and later a Master Mason and marshal of the lodge.<sup>24</sup>

While the county deed records are not available, Thomas and Maggie did own property in town. Court records on his estate show three lots in town, in addition to the farm.<sup>25</sup> In 1885, a Mrs Stephens "opened their millinery store in Nance's building."<sup>26</sup> In a story about the fire department: "One of the first big fires was at the old Exchange Hotel, built in 1880 by Sam Blosser, but owned by T. C. Nance when it burned to the ground in 1908."<sup>27</sup> A store was in the family for some time and was occupied by a furniture business in the 1950s.<sup>28</sup>

In later life Thomas devoted his time chiefly to the breeding of fine horses, keeping about 25 head<sup>29</sup> and was the owner of two stallions: Frank Leslie, of Messenger stock and a noted trick horse; and the Rowdy Dutchman, of the Hambletonian breed. He was a man of progressive ideas, of keen intelligence and strong determination, and never failed to accomplish what he undertook. He took justifiable pride in his ranch, which was supplied with many modern improvements, and the government patents to his land were issued by General Ulysses S. Grant when he was President of the United States.

Thomas was an adherent of the Republican Party and in 1884 was elected Roadmaster for the Santa Maria district, acting in that capacity for two years. In 1884 he was appointed Deputy Sheriff, under R. J. Broughton; he had served in that capacity for 20 years when he was reappointed by Sheriff Nat Stewart in 1907.<sup>30</sup> After his retirement, he moved to his beautiful home on East Main street in Santa Maria. While driving home one evening, he suffered a stroke; his horse brought him home alive in his wagon, but he died a few hours later on May 10, 1913.

His obituary describes him as a true and loyal citizen, devoted husband, and loving father who was favorably known throughout this part of the state. "He was a man of admirable qualities, graceful manners, and easy to become acquainted with and in consequence was universally liked by all whoever met him. His character was above reproach and his honesty and sincerity never had to be questioned."<sup>31</sup>

1. This biographical sketch is started with a composite of information from a biographical sketch in Storke, 1891 (A Memorial and Biographical History of the Counties of Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, and Ventura, California, by Mrs. Yda Addis Storke, The Lewis Publishing Company, 1891, pages 423-424, transcribed by Martha A. Crosley Graham at <http://ca-files.biofiles.us/Storke423-434.htm>), another biographical sketch by Phillips, 1927 (History of Santa Barbara County California From Its Earliest Settlement To The Present Time, by Michael James Phillips, The S. J. Clarke Publishing Co., 1927, Vol II, pages 200-202, transcribed by Larry Turner), and the local obituary for T. C. Nance (Santa Maria Times, May 17, 1913, page 1 column 6). I freely acknowledge using words, phrases, and maybe even sentences from these sources. A variety of additional sources are used and specifically cited.

It should be noted that the obituary tracks Storke very well, and many aspects of Phillips' account also are paraphrased from Mrs. Storke. Her husband, Charles Storke, was a state assemblyman in the 1880s and later mayor of Santa Barbara. It is likely that the Storkes knew T. C. Nance, who was active in the city, as well as in Santa Maria. However, Nance was a Republican and Storke was a Democrat. Both Phillips and the obituary add information not yet available to Storke in 1891, i.e., subsequent to 1891.

2. Gravestone, Santa Maria cemetery and Santa Maria Times obituary. The T. C. Nance Family Bible Record indicates 1839, as do both Storke and Phillips. His age was given as 14 in the 1850 census, which suggests that the 1837 date is more likely correct. His reported age at the time of both of his marriages corresponds to a birth date of about 1842. He seems to be inconsistent.

3. Y. A. Storke, A Memorial and Biographical History of the Counties of Santa Barbara, San Luis Obispo, and Ventura, California. The Lewis Publishing Company, 1881, pp. 423-434. Also T. C. Nance Family Bible Record and various census and voter registration records.

4. T. C. Nance Family Bible Record shows 6 children. The Nance Register by Martin L. Nance (1971 - from LDS Family History Center) has the marriage between William and Lavina, but no children are listed. An unverified Family Group Sheet indicates 7 children with the source apparently being Marshall Nance's will (Marshall was T.C. Nance's grandfather); however, birth dates for the last two daughters are only 3 months apart. The 1850 census records show 7 Nance children living with Lavina (William presumably had died), but William had many siblings, and it is possible that one of the children is not William and Lavina's. William's parents also had young Nance children living with them - too young to be immediate offspring.

5. Storke has the year as 1855; the obituary has 1858, which seems unlikely for two reasons: First is all that he was said to have done after leaving home, and second the obituary states, "In 1858 he went to Missouri to join his uncle Isham Nance, who owned a large plantation and remained until 1858, ..." The idea of coming in 1858 and "remaining" until 1858 suggests a typographic error in the obituary.

6. The 1858 date is according to all major references: Storke, Phillips, and the obituary; however in the 1860 census, he is enumerated in the household of Col. Fouts in Missouri. "Fouts" may be the same as "Faughts" - a name noted in early Buchanan County records.

7. He was said to have "returned as an assistant to John S. Woods." This is unclear, but it appears that he led his own wagon train and then came back to Missouri, assisting Woods. This would account for his being enumerated in the 1860 census with Col. Fouts in Missouri, while still going in 1860, presumably after the census, to Nebraska.

“T. C. Nance, Popular Judge of Baby Shows Has Passed Away

Well Known Santa Marian Had Many Friends at County Seat

The many county seat friends of T. C. Nance will hear with regret of his death at his home in Santa Maria, May 10th. Mr. Nance came to Santa Barbara county in 1872, and has been prominently identified with its development. At the time when county or district fairs were annually held, Mr. Nance was always in demand as judge of the baby shows; in which capacity he showed with a grace that rivalled Bishop Phillips Brooks at a christening as described by Eugene Field. Bishop Brooks, with his winning smile would say to the fond mother, as he took the babe in his arms: ‘Well, this is a baby, isn’t it?’ Which left the dotting mamma with the impression that the good bishop had complemented her child as he never had another.

Mr. Nance, in those good old days of the pavilion and race track and bread contests and baby shows, was equally popular, and his pleasing ways and sterling worth will be long remembered by his Santa Barbara friends.”

is incorrect). Indirect evidence, on the other hand, doesn’t clearly provide the answer to your question. You have to draw on several different sources to reach a conclusion. Let’s assume Granddad’s death certificate burned in a courthouse fire, but, fortunately, the probate records were saved. Granddad’s file doesn’t list his date of death, but it does have dates scattered through the file that give you an idea when he died. Plus, you found his name listed in a local store ledger four months before the probate case opened. Using indirect evidence, you’re getting closer to drawing a reasonable conclusion about his date of death. That’s assuming, of course, that the store clerk didn’t keep Granddad’s name on the account even though he was dead, and it was really Granny who bought the tobacco and not Granddad.

So, what’s a genealogist to do when facing an assortment of documents with all of these truths, half-truths, educated guesses, unfortunate mistakes, and flat-out lies? Turn to the Genealogical Proof Standard (GPS).

Adopted by the Board for Certification of Genealogists, the GPS serves as a standard for credibility in the genealogy world. Genealogical research should satisfy the five elements of the GPS in order to establish confidence in our research conclusions. The five elements are:

1. Conduct a reasonably exhaustive search. Death dates pop up on a number of different sources. I shouldn’t assume that Granddad died on the 21st just because the death certificate says so. Look at all available sources to confirm his death date.

2. Cite your sources. Anyone can manufacture a family history, but if the research can’t be verified through identifiable sources, it lacks credibility.

3. Analyze and draw conclusions based on your research. Think critically about the data you’ve found. How reliable is the source, the information, and the evidence?

4. Resolve conflicting evidence. Even though the death certificate lists Granddad’s death on the 21st his tombstone lists it as the 31st. Further research should help you determine which death date is the most probable.

5. Create a written account of your research. We should compile our research, our conclusions, and our

CONESTOGA WAGONS WESTWARD TO THE OHIO COUNTRY

By G. T. "Tom" Mc Cullough, SBCGS Member gtmccullough@comcast.net

(An excerpt from his book Bernard McCullough and Descendants)

After arriving in Philadelphia from Ulster, Ireland, Bernard and Mary Clark McCullough lived there for about eight years. They migrated west to Clarksville in Perry County, Ohio about 1833. They were most likely Scotch-Irish people. The Scotch-Irish had been coming to America from Ulster for over 100 years before Bernard arrived. The earlier Scotch-Irish settlers had migrated through Philadelphia and had taken up land in western Pennsylvania, the Great Valley and the Carolina Piedmont. The usual migration pattern for later arriving Scotch-Irish, such as Bernard, was to enter America at Philadelphia and then move west to Ohio and beyond.

Bernard and Mary McCullough were about thirty-two years old when they migrated from Pennsylvania to Ohio with their two young children, daughter Mary, age five and son Francis, age three. They most likely traveled by horse-drawn coach or wagon along the Old National Road. It was not until 1845 that the B & O Railroad had pushed as far west as Cumberland, Maryland, and "it was not until 1852 that rail travel reached west of the Allegheny Mountains."<sup>1</sup>

It is very likely that they traveled west in a wagon train of Conestoga covered wagons which were in wide use at that time. These wagons were first built in the Conestoga Valley south of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, in about 1725 and were used until the coming of the railroads. Conestoga wagons were the most numerous vehicles on the National Road in those days. They hauled manufactured goods and settlers to the frontier and brought back agricultural produce to the eastern cities. "The larger Conestoga wagons, usually drawn by six horses, carried loads up to eight tons."<sup>2</sup> "These wagons were used most effectively in the migration to the American Midwest, sometimes parading in caravans of one hundred or more."<sup>3</sup>

In 2007, the author had his photograph taken standing beside a Conestoga wagon at the Ulster American Folk Park Museum located in County Tyrone, Northern Ireland. The wagon was in this museum to demonstrate its importance in the great Irish migration to America in the 18th and 19th centuries.

The Conestoga wagon had no driver's seat like the Prairie Schooners that crossed the Great Plains to California and Oregon in later years. (Prairie Schooners are the wagons commonly seen in modern western movies.) The Conestoga wagons, which predated the Prairie Schooners, were larger and heavier and much more difficult to maneuver, and driven by professional teamsters. They were a sort of early semi-truck. The teamster rode in a saddle on the left rear horse or walked on the left to drive the team. The wagon also had an outrigger seat on the left side just ahead of the left front wheel.

Bernard and Mary probably walked alongside their Conestoga wagon most of the 400 miles to Ohio. The children, Mary and Francis, might have walked some and then napped atop the family's household belongings in the wagon. The records reveal that Bernard McCullough was an illiterate "day laborer." The family probably did not have enough money to stay in the inns along the way. They probably slept in the wagon. Since Conestoga wagons were canvas covered, "families literally lived in these wagons."<sup>4</sup> Conestoga wagons parked overnight at "wagon stands," which were much like today's truck stops. These wagon stands featured all types of services for the travelers as well as for their horses and wagons. Everything was for sale—from ham and eggs to hay and oats.

The route they traveled may have been south from Philadelphia along the Old Post Road (U.S. Highway 1) to Baltimore. The old National Road (Route 40) was the nation's first major road to the West. In the early 1800s, it was predominantly a dirt road with an inn or wagon stand about every mile. Once the McCullough family had reached Zanesville, Ohio, they would have turned southwest off of the National Road and onto Zane's Trace, a very early Ohio road, for the final thirty miles to Perry County. It would have taken them two or three weeks to travel the 400 miles from Philadelphia to Perry County. Now the automobile can drive it in one day.

Statues of the “Madonna of the Trail” stand in several places along the old National Trail put there to commemorate the hardy women who crossed the Appalachian Mountains with their families to settle in what was then the American west. Mary (Clark) McCullough and her two children would have looked and dressed just like those in depicted in the “Madonna of the Trail” statues.

Bernard McCullough and his family most likely followed the National Road since it was the primary route to the West at the time. However, they could have used two other routes. The Pennsylvania Road, also called The Conestoga Road, went from Philadelphia to Pittsburg and connected south to the National Road. From Pittsburg, one could float a flatboat down the Ohio River to the mouth of the Hocking River and row up the Hocking until south of Perry County and then travel north overland. The latter was the least likely route for a family of four with household goods to transport.

The modern highways of today that closely parallel the route that Bernard and his family took from Philadelphia are as follows. South on Interstate 95 to Baltimore, then west on Interstate 70 to Hancock, Maryland. Next, take Interstate 68 to Cumberland, Maryland, and U. S. Route 40 to Washington, Pennsylvania. Then pick up Interstate 70 again and take it west through Wheeling, West Virginia, to Zanesville, Ohio. Turn southwest on Highway 22 and go about thirty miles to Perry County.

NATIONAL ARCHIVES EMPLOYEES PREPARE CIVIL WAR DOCUMENTS

Eastman's Newsletter, May 29, 2009 http://blog.eogn.com/eastmans\_online\_genealog

The National Archives’ Atlanta-area facility has, for several years, kept documents from the Civil War era, ranging from Ku Klux Klan founder Nathan Bedford Forrest’s bankruptcy papers, to oaths of allegiance in which former Confederate soldiers promised to not rebel against the United States again.

But, according to archives employees, the documents were scattered across the many types of files at the facility. There has not been a large, focused concentration of the documents—until now.

Archivists at the Atlanta branch of the National Archives are processing Union Army documents from Kentucky and Tennessee. The documents were recently transferred to the Morrow location from the National Archives facility in Washington D.C., as part of the nationwide effort to put such documents in regional facilities that are closer to people who would be interested in them, archivists said.

The National Archives at Atlanta serves eight states.

After all that, you now have research that you will be proud to pin your name to. Until, of course, a new document surfaces that shoots your conclusions all to heck. That is why genealogies are rarely shifted to the out box with an emphatic "DONE" stamped on them.

CEMETERY ROAD PASSES INTO HISTORY

Highway Takes Old Name San Antonio and Poor Farm Drops Into Discard

Cemetery road has run to its doom. Henceforth it is to be officially known as San Antonio road, which is its real name anyway, but through common but pernicious custom has come to be called by the gruesome title of Cemetery road. This name has become particularly obnoxious since the new county hospital was located beyond the cemetery in question. Going to the hospital by way of Cemetery road seemed like beating Father Time to it. The supervisors made a good job while they were at it yesterday and changed the name of the county hospital to Santa Barbara General Hospital and Farm, and it is reached by way of San Antonio road. It is goodbye forever to county hospital and poor farm.

The new building is one of the most complete and up-to-date in the state and the care and treatment of patients, since Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Vandever have taken charge as superintendent and matron, compares favorably with any hospital in the country.

In future paid patients will be taken as at any other hospital, and the usual patients cared for as well. The supervisors have been very generous in appropriating for improvements and it is hoped to make the institution as nearly self-supporting as possible.

The new tubercular building is nearing completion. This department will be ready to care for patients in January if plans do not miscarry.

THE SOUTHWICKS AND HIGH SOCIETY

Submitted by Jim Friestad, SBCGS Member
<ronjim@cox.net>

Leander Southwick had been married scarcely a year when by the death of an uncle in Nevada he fell heir to an estate worth $450,000.

The inheritance was so unexpected that for some time it was difficult to believe that he, a humble grocer, was the possessor of a fortune greater than even that of his boyhood dreams.

"Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars! What will we do with all that money?" he said to his wife.

Sophronia Southwick, equal to any emergency, from weighing a codfish to making up the monthly accounts, was never at a loss for an idea.

"We must go into society," she promptly replied.

"Society!" shouted Leander. "What do we know about society?"

"Now, Leander, it's ridiculous for you to speak in that strain. You know that none of those rich New Yorkers—and I believe there are 400 of them—know any more about society than we do."

"But they had some education, hadn't they?"

"Yes, but can't we get education as well as they?"

"How do you propose to get it?"

"I propose to go to one of those seminaries."

"Go to a seminary!" shouted her husband. "Why you're too old."

"Too old, Leander! Why, I'm not twenty-three, and you told me this morning that I didn't look more than eighteen!"

Southwick of course saw the absurdity of his wife's position, but realizing it was useless to dissuade her, relaxed his efforts and finally acquiesced in her decision.

"By Jove! She's a dandy! Do you suppose Bert'll have the first dance with her at the next reception?"

"I don't know about that. I think if you wanted to you could cut Bert Fairbanks out."

The two speakers were two seniors of Stanford seminary at Ephesus, N.H. Stanford is a boarding school for both sexes and takes high rank among co-educational institutions.

But, strange as it may appear, its more than local renown is derived from its sheet and pillow case parties.

At these parties the young ladies' faces are masked, their forms are draped with sheets arranged in Greek fashion and their heads are enveloped in pillow cases.

What makes the party especially enjoyable is that they are not previously announced. For not until the sheeted forms, like a group of ghosts, file into the concert hall are the young men aware that the monthly reception has been varied.

The presence of a "new girl" adds a bit of sensation to a Stanford reception. It was a "new girl" of whom the seniors were speaking.

She was tall and slender, of graceful figure and of a fair complexion. Her blue eyes sparkled under long lashes, and a perfect Roman nose gave her an air of superior intelligence.

Her mouth was shapely, if not small, and was capable of the sweetest smile, although its general expression was one of mischief.

Such was the Sophronia Southwick of Stanford—a decided improvement on the Sophronia Southwick of rural Northrop.

By an inadvertence on the part of the secretary, coupled with Sophronia's love of mystery, she had been registered as Miss instead of Mrs. Southwick.

Leander Southwick was not as adept in killing time; therefore, after Sophronia's departure he had sufficient time on his hands to furnish him with a problem more perplexing than the distribution of his suddenly acquired wealth. Letters from Ephesus somehow broke the monotony of his life.

One especially delighted him. He tore it open and read with avidity.

It was a breezy epistle, and in it Sophronia disclosed in gushing language the secret of the sheet and pillow case diversion.

"It's going to be awfully jolly," she wrote. "Not a soul will know us. That mole on my right hand, by which you could always tell me when we went to masquerades, hasn't been noticed here."

"Have you asked her yet?"

"No, I thought I'd better wait until she came up."

"But suppose that Fairbanks has asked her?"

"Oh, I don't believe he's got the nerve. Besides, Miss Southwick doesn't care for him, anyway."

The dialogue between Clarence Whitney and Chet Tufts took place near the platform of the concert hall in Stanford seminary.

About twenty other boy students were present, and by and by, as the orchestra began to "tune up," the town's people flocked in.

When the 8 o'clock bell rang the settees were filled and a great crowd was about the door which led to the girl's corridor.

An "Oh!" of delicious surprise came from the assembled crowd as the sheeted forms filed in.

The orchestra struck up a march and Tufts almost instantly took unto himself a partner.

Whitney prepared to do likewise.

But simultaneous with Whitney, a man, not a student, seized a shapely hand which hung from a gracefully shaped sleeve.

"I beg your pardon," said Whitney, glaring at the stranger.

"I beg your pardon," replied the stranger, with considerable feeling.

To this Whitney impatiently retorted:

"Excuse me, sir, but I have this lady and mean to keep her."

"You mean to keep her, do you? Do you know who she is? This woman is my wife, you puppy."

"Wife!" exclaimed the bystanders.

"Oh!" groaned several, while the sheeted form shrank toward Whitney.

One tall form pushed its way through the crowd to hear the stranger declare:

"This woman is my wife!"

Horror stricken, she cast a swift, sharp glance at the stranger, uttered a wild shriek, and would have fallen to the floor had she not been supported by one of the professors.

She had fainted, and was conducted from the room.

"Miss Southwick has fainted!" cried several.

Then the figure, which the stranger claimed was his wife, removed the mask, revealing the dark, snappy eyes of Miss Walcott.

The stranger looked dumbfounded, then gasped:

"It isn't her!"

The principle addressing this stranger demanded sharply, "Who are you, sir, and what do you mean by causing such a disturbance?"

Leander, for this stranger was Sophronia's husband, swiftly reasoning that an expose might cause Sophronia's expulsion from the seminar, said,

"I'm very sorry, sir, didn't mean what I said. I am"—He did not finish this sentence. Instead he fled from the room precipitously.

On the following day Sophronia was missing from her seat at table.

She was suffering from mental rather than physical distress. Until now she had never suffered the physical pangs of jealousy. At the same time the horrible suspicion possessed her that Leander was a bigamist.

"Oh, what a fool I was," she sobbed.

"Now I know why he didn't want me to come here. I shall tell that Miss Walcott just what I think of her."

Sophonria finally concluded, however, to take her departure from the seminary without making a scene.

She went directly to the railway station. While she was purchasing a ticket she felt a hand on her shoulder, and turning beheld Leander.

"You here!"

His consternation was no less than hers, and he also said,

"You here!"

"Oh, how could you, Leander."

Evidently she was prepared for a confession from her spouse.

Imagine her astonishment therefore, when instead of making a confession he began to load her with reproaches.

"I now see," he said, "why you were so crazy to go to a boarding school. I never dreamed my wife was a natural born flirt. Think how I must have felt hearing those seminary cubs talking about and disputing over my wife, Miss Southwick."

"Oh, Leander. I am not to blame. I didn't mean"—
"Oh, that's a pretty way to get out of it! You pretended you were not married."

"For pity's sake talk grammar, if you can't make sense," said Sophronia resentfully, at the same time drying her eyes and glaring at him contemptuously.

"Never mind the grammar. How about them fellows?"

"Never mind those fellows. How about your other wife?"

"My other wife?"

"Yes, your other wife. Miss Walcott, as she calls herself."

"Miss Walcott: Who the deuce is Miss Walcott?"

"I know and you know who she is," replied Sophronia, "but for pity's sake don't make so much noise. The whole town will hear us, and I want to get out of this place and never set my foot in it again."

"You don't want to get out of it any more than I do. Here's the train now," he added as the shrill whistle of the locomotive was heard in the distance.

When the train stopped Leander took a seat in the smoker and Sophronia entered the rear car.

Thus they proceeded on their way toward Northrop.

They had not made many miles when Sophronia would have gladly joined her husband, but to go into the smoker was out of the question.

It was a feeling akin to joy, therefore, that she beheld him return to her side.

Yet she did not greet him with any protestations of affection, for the spirit of Miss Walcott was still hovering near.

"I don't see how anyone could be as mean as you have been," was her greeting.

"What ails you?" he asked. "Have you had another fit of Miss—what's her name?"

"Miss Walcott—you know her name. You needn't pretend you don't."

"I ain't pretending anything. You've done all the pretending, Miss Southwick."

"I never said my name was Miss Southwick. That was a mistake of the secretary."

"But what about them fellows?"

"I don't know anything about them. They had a right to be at the reception. Now, will you be so kind as to explain who Miss Walcott is and how you came to acknowledge her as your wife before the whole school?"

Dawn now appeared into Leander's brain, and he laughed heartily as he realized what complications had been wrought by the mole on Sophronia's hand, and Sophronia joined in his laughter when he explained to her his mistake.

"I wanted to give you a surprise," he said.

"My letter, I suppose, put that in your head."

"Yes, dear."

Two weeks after the memorable sheet and pillow case party, the principal of Stanford seminary announced to the students the following munificent endowments:

First—$25,000 for the erection of a gymnasium, to be known as the Southwick gymnasium.

Second—$10,000 to establish a scholarship for married couples of limited means, said scholarship to be known as the Sophronia scholarship.

And, thus, Sophronia's place in society was assured!

THE DAILY ROUND OF SOCIETY

The Rev. and Mrs. William Lawrence Wood and their family, who have occupied the Burke house on East Micheltorena street several months, are removing today to Montecito where they have rented the Bertram Goodhue adobe house on Valley road. Miss Mary Cass Canfield, Mrs. Wood's sister, who has been occupying a bungalow on Alameda Court, will go to Montecito with Rev. and Mrs. Wood. Miss Canfield has recovered from an illness from which she suffered at the time of her coming to Santa Barbara several weeks ago.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Black and Mr. Black's brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Black, of Seattle, who are visiting at El Cerrito, left Monday afternoon on a 10 days' motor trip through the southern part of the state. They will visit San Diego, Riverside, and various other places of interest.

* * *

Miss Ruth Black will give a dinner for 12 friends on Saturday evening at El Cerrito, her home on Mission Ridge, after which she will take her party to the Belvedere, where the remainder of the evening will be spent dancing.

Miss Olivia Long is the house guest of Miss Black, visiting at El Cerrito while Mr. and Mrs. Black and their guests are away on a motor tour.
